Ranelagh Remembers

This week at Ranelagh, we have been remembering all those people who have sacrificed their lives to ensure that the world they live in is a better place.

Children across the school honoured those affected by all conflicts and wars by reflecting on loss and holding a minutes silence at 11:00. Year 6, who are learning about the Great War as part of their Ranelagh Curriculum topic, led a very poignant assembly on Tuesday, explaining the causes of the war, reading and sharing poetry and singing a beautiful rendition of Pack Up Your Troubles.

They also spoke of their recent visit to the Shrouds of the Somme exhibit, currently on show in the Olympic Park. The display was made by artist Rob Heard and is made up of 72,396 shrouded figures, each representing a British Commonwealth serviceman who was killed at the Somme and who has no known grave, and many of whose bodies were never recovered from the battlefield.

Elsewhere in the school a selection of Year 5 pupils were invited to attend a special Centenary Armistice Remembrance Service on Friday in Central Park, East Ham, underneath the Central Park War Memorial. The service was held by the Royal British Legion and a collection of Newham Schools, who gathered to pay their respects. The children sang hymns, listened to poetry and observed a minutes silence, and they also heard from a member of the Royal British Legion who spoke of his very personal relationship to the First World War and how members of his family fought, served and died on the battlefields of Europe.

Ben, in Year 5, commented, "It was touching to hear of how young boys, barely older than me and from this area went off to war and were so brave. I never knew so many went to fight."

As the world reflects and commemorates one hundred years since the end of the Great War, Ranelagh remembers.

Pupil Parliament Visit the Place of Democracy Reporters: Imani, Sara, Katie and Franklyn.

Pupils from the TTLT Pupil Parliament went to Westminster to learn about Parliament and government. We found out that there are three sections to passing law – the House of Commons, the House of Lords and the Queen. The Queen only has a ceremonial role. Parliament actually writes out the Queen's speech! Elections take place every 5 years. There are 650 MPs that sit in the House of Commons. We learnt that Parliament's job is to check and challenge the government and debate important issues of today. It was surprising to learn that debates take place in Parliament every day. Some of them are: Government debates, opposition day debates and the House of Lords Debates. There was a lot of protection around the building and we experienced going through vigorous security checks. There were armed police officers and detective dogs everywhere!

The talk 'How Parliament Works' was delivered to us as well as lots of adults which made us feel very mature and part of an important system.
